New declaration given at conference

PRES. JAMES E. FAUST

A new declaration was announced at the General Relief Society Meeting Saturday by Relief Society General President Mary Ellen W. Smoot.

The declaration, which is "approved and endorsed by the First Presidency (of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints) and the Quorum of the Twelve," is a "continual reminder to focus on our most important responsibilities," President Smoot said.

The declaration states that Relief Society sisters are daughters of God who are devoted to Jesus Christ. It also outlines nine areas in which sisters need to be striving, including "Delight in service and good works," "Love life and learning" and "Stand for truth and righteousness."

In announcing the declaration, President Smoot said, "We testify each of us has a vital role, even a sacred mission, to perform as a daughter of Zion."

According to President Smoot, the declaration was created in response to inquiries from people outside the church as well as to remind Relief Society sisters of the blessings of womanhood.

Also announced at the conference was that the name of Homemaking Meeting will be changed to Home, Family and Personal Enrichment, effective January 1, 2000. Sister Virginia U. Jensen, first counselor in the Relief Society General Presidency, explained the reason for the new name is to more clearly define the purpose of the gathering, which is to "enrich and improve each of our lives."

The new Home, Family and Personal Enrichment meeting is a place for Relief Society members "to share sisterhood, to gain knowledge, to learn skills and to increase testimony," Sister Jensen said.

Mr. Jones too much for hobbled D

Thomas Jones backed up the hype Saturday night.

The Virginia running back ran wild through the Rob Morris-less Cougar defense, piling up 210 yards on 35 carries and leading the Cavaliers to a 45-40 win over BYU.

Virginia set the tone from the outset, dominating the first quarter and moving the ball downfield with relative ease for three touchdowns. The third score of the opening quarter came on a 23-yard run by Jones with 1:11 on the clock, giving the Cavaliers a 21-0 lead and leaving BYU coaches, players and fans wondering what was happening.

"I'm very disappointed in how we began the ball game," BYU head coach LaVell Edwards said. "We didn't seem to know what was going on in the first quarter."

The defense certainly missed Morris, its All-American, run-stopping linebacker who watched the game from the sidelines with an abdominal strain.

"It was a huge factor," defensive lineman Byron Frisch said of not having Morris in the lineup. "He brings leadership. He brings motivation. He's more than just a guy out there making tackles."

Nothing seemed to be going right for the Cougar offense in the first quarter, either.

Quarterback Kevin Feterik completed just two of eight passes for only nine yards and two interceptions in the first period before getting on track.

The Cougars were able to move the ball in the second quarter for three touchdowns, including two from freshman Luke Staley, including an impressive 41-yard scamper to the end zone with 3:17 remaining in the half to cut the lead to 28-12.

The Provo City Council primary election ballot will be loaded with candidates who have been active voters for most of this decade, according to the Utah County Election Records Office.

The seven candidates for districts II and III have a voting average of 79 percent for 1992-1999, according to the office's files.

But the records show that only two candidates, Stan Lockhart and Melanie McCoard, have a 100 percent voting record for the seven-year period. Candidate Richard Mack has the lowest voting record — 13 percent — because he has been a registered voter since only 1997.

Now, after years of casting their votes in the community, the candidates themselves are seeking the support of Provo voters in their pursuit of two City Council seats.

Primary elections are Oct. 5., but the candidates have been voicing their individual platform issues to city residents for months.

City Council chair and District III candidate Mark Hathaway said he is concerned about traffic flow in Provo. Road improvements and freeway exits are some issues he would address if reelected.

District II candidate Stan Lockhart said road congestion is also one of his platform issues. He said he hopes to find solutions to the traffic problem if elected to the City Council.

"We have got to find ways to ease the congestion and gridlock in our city. That is the most pressing issue in Provo right now," Lockhart said.

He also has questioned Provo's ability to house the thousands of college students who live in the city, and said the city's zoning laws must be re-examined.

District III candidate Samuel Oman agreed that the city needs to deal with housing problems faced by BYU students.

"I believe that the city has a responsibility to those students, to protect them, that their living conditions are safe, that they have parking," Oman said.

Another of his concerns is the imbalance of power in Provo city government.

Oman said the City Council lacks the power it needs to effectively fulfill its role in the community. He said the city administrators have more power than necessary.

District III candidate Melanie McCoard said she is also concerned about the imbalance of power in the city's government. She said the power needs to be shifted, but not just to the hands of City Councilmembers.

Provo residents need to be involved in government as well, she said.

If elected, McCoard said she would focus on giving residents more than just "token opportunities" to be involved in City Council proceedings.

McCoard has also expressed concerns about past city funding decisions. She said the City Council needs to more carefully make decisions about the allocation of budget funds.

She said she would propose increased financial support for the protection of student renters and funding for drug intervention programs in Provo.

District III candidate Chris Nelson's campaign platform also focuses on the need for more city programs in Provo. If elected, he said he would try to implement more youth athletic programs.

Road improvements, tax revenues and other Provo issues also have been addressed by the seven candidates in their campaign efforts.

District II candidates are Stan Lockhart and Brent McQuarrie.

District III candidates are Mark Hathaway, Richard Mack, Melanie McCoard, Samuel Oman and Chris Nelson.

Five other candidates from the Northwest and Southeast districts will also be on the Oct. 5 City Council primary election ballot.

Student drugs teacher, gets jail time

CINCINNATI — An 18-year-old pupil who said he put a capsule of LSD in the soft drink of a favorite teacher as a joke has agreed to a deal that would put him in jail for a year.

Jared Maier admitted in court on Friday that he spiked the drink before class began on May 3 at Colerain High School. Sentencing will be in November.

"I did not think that amount of LSD would have this much effect," he said in a statement to police. "I would never do anything to hurt him," he told police. "I screwed up and I'm sorry."

He pleaded guilty to one count of attempting to corrupt another with drugs. He could have received up to five years in prison.

Prosecutor Mike Allen said the original charge, corrupting another with drugs, could have carried a life sentence if the teacher had been seriously injured. The teacher, Timothy Hicks, felt sick soon after drinking the soda but has not had lasting health problems.

Clinton gains 18 lbs., but still healthy

BETHESDA, Md. — President Clinton has gained 18 pounds since his last complete physical examination but is in "excellent health," a team of doctors reported Saturday. They said swollen vocal cords were causing his recent hoarseness and recommended he rest his voice.

The 53-year-old president, who has enjoyed generally good health since entering the White House in 1993, weighs 214 pounds, still within the normal range of up to 220 pounds for a 6-foot-2-inch man, said Clinton's physician, Dr. Connie Mariano.

"He would feel best and most fit if he could drop about 10 pounds," White House press secretary Joe Lockhart told reporters outside the Bethesda Naval Medical Center.

Doctors recommended a low-calorie diet and more exercise, which Lockhart said Clinton's staff will try to help Clinton maintain.

Italy's first cloned bull freaks 'em out

Poor Galileo. Just a youngster and he's under arrest — locked in a stall and accused of being a freak. The young bovine's crime? He's a clone.

Galileo, billed as Italy's first cloned bull, was unveiled Thursday at a dairy cattle show in Cremona. The backlash was swift from a government that forbids cloning.

"A monster!" proclaimed a prominent Green senator, Maurizio Pieroni.

The next day, the Health Ministry confiscated Galileo pending an investigation into his creation. They also nabbed his dad, a famous bull named Zoldo.

Galileo was born at a laboratory in Cremona under the guidance of Italian veterinarian Cesare Galli, who worked with the Scottish scientist who created Dolly the sheep in 1997. But Dolly, the world's first mammal cloned from an adult cell, was a worldwide sensation and has lived a life of pampered ease. Galileo, by contrast, is being treated "like a dangerous terrorist," one commentator said.

U.S. tells Russia to attack corruption

WASHINGTON — The United States and its wealthy allies told Russian authorities on Saturday there was a "critical need" for that country to attack corruption and money laundering.

Financial leaders from the world's seven largest industrial countries saw encouraging signs that the global economy was beginning to stabilize after nearly two years of severe financial turmoil although there was discussion among the group about the threats posed from a potentially overheated U.S. economy.

In an 11-page joint statement, the finance ministers and central bank presidents of the Group of Seven countries noted that Japanese authorities had given assurances that they intended to supply necessary government stimulus until "domestic-demand-led-growth is solidly in place."

Scripture of the Day

"...but let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price."

— 1 Peter 3:3-4

Camille Ostler likes this scripture because "it talks about how God doesn't look upon our outward appearance as the world does." Ostler, 22, is a junior from West Jordan.

Other speakers at the meeting included President James E. Faust, second counselor in the First Presidency, and Sister Sheri L. Dew, second counselor in the Relief Society General Presidency.

President Faust reminded sisters of some of the privileges and obligations that come from being daughters of God. "As daughters of God, you cannot imagine the divine potential within you," he said. He invited sisters to use their unique gifts to "do something for someone else that no one else ever born can do."

President Faust also told those in attendance of the need to be faithful.

"Never in the history of the world has there been a greater need for your righteousness, your example and your good works to move this holy work forward," he said.

Sister Dew discussed the importance of turning away from the world.

"We are not women of the world," she said. "We are women of God."

Sister Dew urged all in attendance to identify at least one thing they can do to turn away from the world in order to come closer to the Savior. She emphasized, "In the days ahead, a casual commitment to Christ will not carry us through."

Farm teams go to bat again to play in Provo

By ROB ROGERS

rob@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

All around the country baseball parks are closing and baseball teams are packing up and going home for the season.

But not in Provo.

In Provo, the season may just be starting.

After it died in a legal quagmire three years ago, the proposition of bringing a minor league baseball team to Provo has resurfaced. An eight member ad hoc committee set up by Provo Mayor Lewis Billings and led by Provo City Director of Economic Development Leland Gamette, is meeting tonight in a closed meeting to discuss potential locations for a ballpark.

In order to get a minor league team to come to Provo, Gamette said, the city has to be able to meet the team's needs, and in Provo's case that means a ballpark large enough to hold approximately 5000 people.

"We're going through a process," Gamette said. "It takes time."

Specific sites for the park have not been disclosed by the committee, but BYU campus and a city owned lot in southeast Provo have been named by city officials, reported a Sep. 13 article in the Deseret News.

Costs for the ballpark are estimated to be around $5 million, and Billings has emphatically stated that he will not raise taxes to pay for the park.

"I think baseball needs to make sense," Billings said. Provo faces financial and geographical challenges in bringing a minor league baseball team to Provo. These challenges have to be weighed against the advantages of having a team here, Billings said.

The Helena Brewers, one the Milwaukee Brewers' farm teams, is being looked at by the city as the potential team to come to Provo, Gamette said. This year the Brewers are being reviewed by the major League Baseball Association, which makes the timing perfect, said Gamette.

The committee will draft a final report on possible stadium locations and then submit that to the City Council who will then make the final decision.

Joe Beusus, owner of the Salt Lake Buzz, had contracted when buying the Buzz that no other minor league team could exist in counties neighboring Salt Lake County. But now that he has given consent, talk of getting a team in Provo has come up again.

Phone service says 'no' to telemarketers

By STACEY CHARLESWORTH
stacey@du2.byu.edu
Associate Campus Editor

Few people want to talk to them but almost everyone does. Who are they? Telemarketers. And even though U S WEST developed an antidote against telemarketers, telemarketers efforts are not being weakened.

U S WEST announced its "No Solicitation" service in February. One month later, it introduced another service to counteract telemarketers—"Caller ID with Privacy+." These two services, made available to both residential and small business customers, screen all incoming calls.

In the case of "No Solicitation," a message plays that tells telemarketers their call is unwanted, and they should remove this phone number from their list.

Customers can select 25 friends to bypass this message, but any other undesignated call will automatically receive the message. If the caller is not a telemarketer, he or she can dial one to get through.

Since April, 300,000 orders have been placed region wide with U S West, from Minnesota to Washington and Oregon, for telephone privacy services, said Michael Frandsen, U S WEST Utah spokesperson. Frandsen said U S WEST serves 14 states in the region, but the privacy services are not offered in all of these states. "No Solicitation" and "Caller ID with Privacy+" are available in most parts of the Salt Lake Valley and Wasatch Front, he said.

Richard Griffin, financial business unit leader for Marketing Ally Teleservices in Provo, said 300,000 phones with a telemarketing block is a small amount in comparison to the number of people his company calls each day.

"We call thousands and thousands of people a day, and less than half of a percent of those are screened" Griffin said.

Griffin said it's ironic that U S WEST makes billions of dollars from telemarketing companies and yet it sells services to combat them.

He said in the end it will come down to one or the other winning, and he's confident that his company and other telemarketing companies will remain strong despite the services built against them.

Griffin and others who work for telemarketing companies said the "No Solicitation" service may prove to be more of a benefit than a harm.

"We don't want to get people who ramble—it makes our job less efficient," Griffin said.

Additionally, the morale of telemarketers may be boosted as they encounter less offensive people, Griffin said.

While Griffin has not seen any noticeable differences yet, he said the effects of the U S WEST privacy services may become more noticeable in about five years.

A U S WEST sales consultant in the Denver Center for Customer Service said she thinks sales of privacy services will increase significantly in the next 12 months.

Like Griffin, she also recognized the benefits of these services for telemarketing companies.

She said there are plenty of people who want to buy from telemarketers, and the subtraction of those who don't want to talk to them will save everyone's time.

Rebecca Buffington, a telemarketer at Convergys, also said she thinks the "No Solicitation" and other privacy services will be advantageous to telemarketers by reducing the number of people who don't want to be bothered.

"They yell at you," Buffington said. "And you get off the phone hating your job because you get yelled at."

Not all telemarketers view the U S WEST screening services as an advantage, though.

Elizabeth Kelly, a BYU student and marketing service representative for Marketing Ally Teleservices, said the majority of the people she talks to don't want to hear what she has to say. However, part of her job is convincing people they should listen to her, she said.

"No one wants to be yelled at," Kelly said. "But in this business, you

Reactions to act prompt changes

By MANDY REDD

Recent reaction to the Endangered Species Act, adopted in 1973 to protect American wilderness and wildlife, has prompted government agencies and other organizations to make changes.

Scott Root, information and education manager of the Central Region Wildlife Resources Division in Springfield, said that although the act has received limited opposition from ranchers in the central region, on occasion, the agency has found certain species, such as eagles or coyotes, killed by poison or gun shot.

To encourage support of the Endangered Species Act, Root said the Central Region Wildlife Division encourages people to become educated about environmental issues.

"We are doing all we can ... education has been an important step," Root said.

Other Utah groups also recognize the need for environmental awareness, but emphasize land owners' needs and rights as well.

The national organization People for the U.S.A., has 12 Utah chapters involving almost 300 members, many of whom are ranchers and farmers. Jim Geerts, Secretary Treasurer of the Salt Lake Chapter of People for the U.S.A. and a member of the People for the U.S.A. State of Utah Steering Committee, has a different idea about what the Endangered Species Act should protect.

"(Preserving a) small insect can endanger an entire agricultural, rural community," he said. Geerts said People for the U.S.A. tries to influence legislation to keep lands for agricultural and limited conservation purposes or "multiple use."

Geerts attributes Utah's rural problems to outsiders, unfamiliar with Utah, who try to change environmental policy.

In June, the Western Governors' Association, which represents governors from 18 western states, confirmed its commitment to bridging the gap between land owners and environmentalists — and specifically to reforming the Endangered Species Act.

Sponsored by Govs. Leavitt and Kitzhaber, D-Ore., the Principles for Environmental Management in the West Policy, which includes reform of the Endangered Species Act, has become Western governors' "number one priority," according to a WGA news release.

Karen Deike, communications director for the Western Governors' Association, said support of the proposal is to combat a growing problem within these governors' offices.

"There is not a governor's office that hasn't seen one, if not several concerns regarding endangered species management. We are looking for ways to resolve conflicts and make changes administratively," Deike said. For now, administrative reform concerning the act will be ongoing. Governors will do all they can regarding the limits of the Endangered Species Act and agriculturalists' economic concerns, Deike said.

Hinckley says thanks to contributors

President B. Hinckley of the Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints Church addressed BYU in "Celebrating the Success" ceremony Friday night. While the ceremony signals the ending of the "Lighting the Way" campaign, which is expected to raise more than $380 million by its official conclusion on Dec. 31, 1999.

Hinckley challenged participants to continue to reach a little more another $20 million. He said that we can do it. In the assurance already of a generous benefactor," he has been made possible by alumni, faculty and staff. U. President Hinckley thanked every contribution as Hinckley attributed the success of giving to the fact that we want to invest their money. Cold Sober University President Merrill J. J. said, "One where people develop a strong relationship creator."

Hinckley also joked that he would like to be indebted to another source, the IRS, if people give your money to us or we'll take it from them. He noted that there is responsibility associated with the funds. "We treat these funds and because they are entrusted to be wise stewards,"

Hinckley said these funds would extend the reach of the university accomplishments in four main areas: the classroom, in the lab, in the reach of BYU to those who do not have the opportunity to physically attend BYU, and in developing friends across the world.

In a video presentation, President Bateman said there has been a groundswell of support since the inception of this project as BYU Provo and BYU Hawaii communities have come together like never before.

Eric Shumway, president of BYU-Hawaii said that not only will the campaign provide critical programs and scholarships for international students that have no other hope of gaining a higher education, but it also is helping to fulfill President David O. McKay's prophecy that BYU-Hawaii would become a beacon light to Asia. Shumway said that the Lord will bless those that continue to give and he shared the words of an aging donor, "When I die, the only things that I can take with me are what I can give away."

Shumway compared this spirit of giving to the tradition of the Hawaiian breadfruit tree that will continue to bless the lives of many and produce abundantly as long as it is never sold and always given away.

Following Shumway's remarks, students and alumni from BYU-Hawaii performed two Polynesian dances that Shumway said expressed gratitude to the Lord. Tears streamed down the faces of the dancers while they performed.

President Bateman noted the grace and spiritual quality of the dancers and paid tribute to the Polynesian people. He also commented on the performances by BYU's combined choirs and philharmonic orchestra. "The music doesn't get better than what we've heard this evening," he said.

At the beginning of the campaign, former president of BYU, Rex E. Lee, said, "I'm convinced that at some point in the future, we're going to look back and mark the capital campaign as one of the defining events in the university's history."

At the conclusion of his remarks, President Hinckley said, "Thanks for what you have done. It is not a small thing. No one can measure the influence this campaign will have. An investment in this endowment is an investment to generations of the future."

President. Hinckley speaks at the conclusion of the "Celebrating the Success" ceremony Friday night. The celebration was in honor of the many contributors of the "Lighting the Way" campaign, which is expected to raise more than $380 million by its official conclusion on Dec. 31, 1999.

Women fight aggression in self-defense class

By GARNET DEAKINS
garnet@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

A carefully and powerfully placed kick echoes through the Heritage Halls Central Building as it hits an "aggressor" dressed from head to toe in thick black padded armor. The room erupts in cheers and shouts, encouraging the "victim" to follow up that kick with a head butt or strong elbow in the stomach.

This exercise is just part of the simulation training for instructors of the Rape Aggression Defense (RAD) classes. These special instruction courses were hosted by BYU last week.

"Those suits may look tough, but you can still feel everything. Girls can kick a lot harder than you think. After getting struck a few times, you will really start to feel it," said Officer Josh Gilmore from Idaho State University. Gilmore has participated in ISU's RAD program for several years and came to BYU to act as an "aggressor" in the training exercises. "RAD's goal is to help women develop and enhance optimal self defense methods and give them viable considerations when attacked in a sexual assault situation," said Capt. Steve Williams of the San Diego State Police and regional director of RAD.

Thelma Gowans, a corrections officer for the Toole County Sheriff's Office, said the course has helped her gain more confidence.

Since its beginnings 10 years ago in Virginia, the RAD program has grown to include over 3,000 instructors in 350-400 campus settings across the United States, Williams said.

One member of the Springfield Police Department, Debbie Hatfield, said the classes teach valuable skills for women.

"So many are raised to be passive peacemakers. They don't punch and they are afraid to defend themselves. It's good for women to learn that it is OK to hurt people that are trying to hurt you," Hatfield said.

Twenty-one potential instructors attended this three-day RAD seminar. They came from various locations in Utah, Idaho and Colorado and from many backgrounds and occupations in law enforcement, rape crisis, BYU Housing Administration and fitness instruction.

"It's scary, big guys, big black suits," said Chris Gifford a fitness instructor from Santaquin who was sponsored by the Utah County Sheriff's Office. "But you feel really good when you're finished. It gives me a little more confidence and experience. This is something that I can do to help my community."

While the program itself is only offered to women, men who are training to be instructors must also go through the simulations as a victim.

Playing New Orleans-style jazz, the Dixieland Band will kick off the evening with "Black and Blue" by Fats Waller and the up-tempo spiritual "When the Saints Go Marching In."

The third group headlining Jazz Showcase is Syncopation, the only vocal jazz group participating in the performance.

"We do the kind of stuff you can shuffle to, all the way to extremely beautiful ballads," said Bob Bailey, the director.

Syncopation will be hitting both ends of the spectrum with its selections, which include the jazz standard, "Day by Day," Oliver Nelson's "Stolen Moments" and "It Ain't Easy Being Green" of Sesame Street fame.

"We just wanna send 'em out hopping," Bailey said.

"I think the whole idea is to showcase jazz's diversity, its entertainment value and its artistic value," Call said.

Quake hits students, families

BYU students and alumni coping with disaster

By JESSICA OROZCO
jessica@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

While clutter and confusion still prevail in Taiwan after the Tuesday earthquake, family members of missionaries and Taiwanese students whose families are back home finally felt a sense of relief.

Jory Argyle, a missionary from Tremonton, Box Elder County, serving in Taipei, was shaken out of bed at 1:47 a.m. It was his first night at his apartment after spending the previous night at the mission home.

Jory's brother Jayson Argyle, 24, said he wasn't very worried when he first heard about it.

"I thought it probably wasn't a big deal," he said.

After he realized the severity of the 7.6-magnitude earthquake, Jayson Argyle said he was very alarmed, although he was not worried. Jory called his family the same day the earthquake happened, to inform them he was safe.

"It's a good thing it happened his first day," said Jayson.

Another missionary, Lucas Adams, had been on his mission two months in Taichung. His mother also experienced an uncertainty of not knowing if her son was safe. She said she was comforted to finally hear her son say, "Mom, I'm alive," and feels her son is protected.

While the families of the two missionaries were comforted, two UVSC students were still waiting to hear from their families back home. Yahwie Lin and Tingyu Lien, from Taishung County, Taiwan, said they were finally able to speak to their families after two days.

Lien said her parents accepted the fact that they might die and felt at peace. Lien said that her family is not allowed to stay at their home, even though no major damage was done to their house. They have to stay at a school gymnasium until the government gives them permission to go back to their home. Lien said the government is afraid another earthquake will hit in the next two months.

Life is back to normal for BYU students and alumni living in Taiwan, but the memories and experiences of the quake continue to shake their thoughts.

"The apartment shook pretty hard and for quite a long time after I got out of bed and got the baby to safety," said D.C. Wright, an alumnus living in Taiwan with his wife and 1-year-old daughter.

Wright has been working for Duelling Arts International Company from California for the last five years. He directs and produces a western cowboy stunt show that performs six to seven shows a day at the World Adventure Leefoo Village in Shinchu, Taiwan.

Shinchu is located about 70-90 miles from the epicenter of the quake.

Rachel Kimsey, 21, a senior from Cameron Park, Calif. is also in Taiwan performing in Wright's cowboy stunt show.

"There's no problem getting food, but there is no refrigeration to keep it," Kimsey said.

She said no one in the performing group understands Mandarin, so getting information from news reports is difficult. However, Kimsey said the town they are living in is not damaged, and the group is in good spirits.

Dean of Education John Tanner's daughter is also in Taiwan teaching English in Taichung. Bobbie Sandberg and her husband, Steve Sandberg, were woken up by a violent shake that lasted about 20 seconds early Tuesday morning, she said.

"We got into the car and drove to an open area and stayed there for about three to four hours throughout the aftershocks," Mrs. Sandberg said.

"It was so noisy and chaotic with everyone on the street staying away from buildings," Mrs. Sandberg said.

She said Taichung lost electricity for 24 hours after the quake, and now the whole city is out of water.

"We went walking around the city; there were tents everywhere. Many people stay in parks or open area for a couple of days afraid of aftershocks," Mr. Sandberg said.

Kimsey's family lives in Sandy, and they were worried about her because the telephone lines were down.

"My parents are very proud of Rachel and know she is self-sufficient even on the other side of the globe," said Rachel Kimsey's younger sister, Lauren Kimsey.

Emaine Lauzon steps in front of Margin to deal a pass just outside the end zone in the fourth quarter of BYU's loss Saturday at Cougar Stadium. Virginia's Yubrenal Isabelle (No. 18) was called for holding on the play, negating the interception and giving the ball back to the Cougars.

Before you start freaking out...

If you hadn't heard, BYU lost a football game this week. In fact, people in Provo were whispering about a perfect season and a championship Series.

But before you get too carried away shaking your heads, let me say something. It's a good football team. It's especially the first Saturday's game aside, but not much to complain about.

But for LaVell Edwards' sake, let's take away that first quarter, in which the team was about as tough as a tier-3 intramural team. Of course, BYU was playing without its star and lost Jeff Holtry to a concussion on the second series, but the whole game qualifies as a probably like to forget.

But the trouble was a slow start by Kevin Feterik. He put it, got impatient and started throwing. The result was a couple of early interceptions and a deficit at the end of the first quarter.

But the Cougars were lucky to be down just one point and their problems were further compounded by a pass/fumbled lateral that Virginia's Tim Edwards ran into the end zone amid blank stares.

The play was ruled a fumble, and the momentum that had begun to shift in the Cougars' favor was gone. But let's look at what happened after that.

Let's be honest, BYU was getting spanked on national television in a game the Cougars admitted to being overconfident about. That — along with Thomas Jones — begins to explain the weak start in the first half.

But instead of meekly bending over to take its whipping, the team lived up to its billing and fought back.

"I told them I admired their courage," Edwards said after the game.

Feterik said Saturday's comeback attempt was proof of the team's strength.

"We fought back," he said. "That's what this team's all about. We lost the game, but we lost it with pride."

So there won't be a perfect season or a trip to the BCS. OK.

So BYU dropped out of the polls and learned it wasn't invincible. Fine.

But the Cougars also proved their character Saturday night, and that's an invaluable asset to a football team.

It doesn't get crushed on a play and end up out for the season. It's one of those "intangibles" coaches are always talking about and wishing for — and BYU has it. So before you start cursing Feterik and lamenting that the defense just isn't what it was last year, take a deep breath and remember that. It will still be around in December, and so will the Cougars.

BYU cornerback Brian Gray then picked off a pass from Virginia quarterback Dan Ellis and returned it 28 yards for a touchdown with 1:47 left in the half, sending the Cougars to the break trailing only 28-19 and gaining momentum.

BYU got the ball to start the second half, but on its second play, Feterik took the snap and passed the ball down the line of scrimmage to wide receiver Jonathan Pittman, who mishandled the ball as it dropped to the turf.

What appeared to be an incomplete turn into a Virginia touchdown. Virginia defensive back Tim Spruill picked up the ball and ran 20 yards into the end zone while the BYU offense stood around and wondered what was going on. The officials ruled that the play was not a forward pass, therefore making the ball live as it hit the ground.

The critical play put Virginia ahead 35-19, but BYU came right back with a Feterik to Margin Hooks 30-yard touchdown pass, trimming Virginia's lead to 35-26.

The two teams continued to trade scores until BYU took possession of the ball on its own 11-yard line with 8:03 to go in the game and trailing by five, 40-45.

The Cougars moved the ball down to the Virginia 8-yard line with 2:57 left when Staley ran the ball on first and goal to the 1-yard line.

But, instead of having second-and-goal on the one, a critical holding call moved the ball back to the 16-yard line.

"That holding call there was ridiculous," Feterik said of the penalty.

From there the offense sputtered.

After moving just five yards in three plays, Feterik dropped back to pass on fourth down, only to have his bullet to the end zone picked off by Virginia defensive back Jerton Evans.

"This was a tough one to lose,"

Edwards said. "But I admire the courage of the team to fight and get back in it."

"We lost with pride and that's the main point," said Feterik, who completed 28 of 47 passes for 303 yards and three touchdowns despite three interceptions. "Everyone is still upbeat and no one is pointing fingers."

Though no one is pointing fingers, the Cougars know they can't afford to come out flat in the first quarter.

"Looking back on the game, the first quarter killed us," Staley said. "We just came out a little too confident."

As far as watching and not playing, Morris said he wasn't too thrilled.

"It was one of the low points of my career," the linebacker said about sitting out the game with an injury. "It's right up there with getting your teeth pulled. The realization that I'm not invincible is the hardest part."

Stingy Y Defense spins two shutouts

by JENNIFER GROSKREUTZ
groskreutz@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Sports Writer

Two shutouts in back-to-back games last weekend increased the BYU women's soccer team's record to 9-1 this season. The Cougars defeated Washington 3-0 and beat Pacific 2-0.

In each of the games, BYU's stingy defense held the opposing team to only six shots on goal while BYU had 24.

The team's second shutout of the season, against Washington on Friday night, was witnessed by the second-largest crowd — 2,078 fans — ever to see a BYU women's soccer game.

BYU controlled the game for the majority of the game. Senior forward Sarah Reading headed the ball in off an assist from forward Kim Lowe and defender Staci Reynolds for the first goal.

"It was the biggest rush," Reading said of the goal.

She said it was one of those moments when you see the ball coming, and get excited because you now you're going to get it in.

Senior All-American Maren Hendershot was next to hit the net. Sophomore midfielder Sarah Higham and midfielder Athelia Graham assisted.

Reading came back to the net to assist Karen Robbins-Wunderli, who nailed in a goal during the second half.

Head coach Jennifer Rockwood said the team played outstanding and won 50-50 battles on the field.

She said she was also pleased with the team's performance, because even when the subs came in, no one let up. The players kept the same pressure and intensity on the field, she said.

The third shutout of the season was against Pacific on Saturday with a much smaller, but just as raucous, crowd.

After two tough games last week in California, where BYU had its first loss, and a tiring game Friday night, the Cougars were a little fatigued in Saturday night's game. However, they stayed in it and ended with a victorious 2-0 score.

Higham landed a long shot, assisted, in the first 10 minutes of the game. She said she thought the goal helped settle the team down.

Hendershot scored five minutes later off a nice one-touch pass from Wunderli.

Rockwood said the team struggled and gave an average performance Saturday night.

The game was slower, and the Cougars found the net better in Friday's game, she said.

Higham said the team has had a hard schedule, and another hard weekend lies ahead. Hendershot said the team is just tired.

BYU will take on Weber State on Wednesday at 3 p.m. before it leaves for a two-game trip to Massachusetts this weekend.

In each of the games, BYU's stingy defense held the opposing team to only six shots on goal while BYU had 24.

BYU rugby team takes out UVSC

By KEVIN FRANSON
franson@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Sports Writer

BYU's rugby team handily defeated UVSC by a score of 73-10 on Saturday afternoon.

The game was never close as BYU scored just four minutes into the game. BYU continued its domination over UVSC by scoring six more times during the first half.

Despite the large win over a new program, BYU coach David Smythe is looking for more out of his players.

"What you saw were some great moments, but it was inconsistent," Smythe said. "We can't execute a game plan for an entire 80 minutes yet. We get some good spurts and then have mental and physical breakdowns. We're still not where we need to be for our fitness level."

The win moves BYU to a record of 2-0 in the fall league. The game provided several highlights for the Cougars. Jeff Bradshaw, who handles some of the kicking responsibilities, was a perfect six-for-six during the first half on his kicks for 2-point conversions.

Bradshaw also finished the half with a 60-meter run to score a try of his own. Latu Fifita made good on the two-point conversion and BYU took a 49-0 lead into halftime.

Fifita agreed with his coach that despite the large margin of victory, the Cougars have room to improve. "It was a great win, but we have a lot of things to work on. We're not doing what we're supposed to be doing," Fifita said.

UVSC exploited one of those weaknesses by scoring a second and final try with only five minutes remaining in the second half, but missed again on the two-point conversion.

BYU's leading scorer was Jeff Bradshaw. Bradshaw scored 29 points, including one penalty kick, seven two-point conversions, and two tries.

"I could see where the gaps were and where to place the ball," Bradshaw said. "They were not as fit and it left the holes open."

Co-captain and teammate in the BYU backfield, Erik Oh, values Bradshaw's ability to keep things going.

"He does his job," Oh said. "He doesn't get as tired and we don't have to worry. We need to not have to worry about those things. He is a great player."

"We have a lot of good individual talent. You start off with good individuals and work at becoming good collectively," Lamb said.

Chris Rader, UVSC head coach, said he used the game to feel out areas where individual players could learn to specialize.

"Tonight was a good opportunity to see where my players need to go. Until it's a game you don't know how your players are going to react," Rader said.

With only four returning starters, both BYU team captains also recognized the game as an opportunity to increase team cohesiveness.

"This game was a chance to see what our abilities are and how we work together as a team," said captain Dan Murdock, a junior from Sudbury, Mass.

Tommy Hawes, a senior captain from New Canaan, Conn., agreed.

"We need to be pushing each other and challenging each other to bring out the winner in each of us," he said.

Cougs beat Cal, lose to Stanford

By CHRISTINE JACKSON
jackson@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Sports Writer

The BYU women's volleyball team beat California on Friday in three games 15-11, 15-8, 16-14 and lost to No. 7 Stanford Saturday in three games, 15-11, 15-7, 15-10 in the Pacific-10/Mountain West Conference Challenge.

Saturday's game improves Stanford's record to 8-1 and leaves BYU with an overall record of 7-2. The Cougars' first loss was to Michigan.

Head coach Elaine Michaelis said the team has the skills but needs to improve in order to beat teams like Stanford.

"We played at times really well and were very competitive but we are just not consistent enough to play with teams that are playing at that level right now," she said. "We're good enough to be at that level but we're not there yet. We still have some work to do."

Stanford was led by All-American Kerri Walsh who had 15 kills and a hitting percentage of .429. Logan Tom, a freshman out of Salt Lake City, also contributed 12 kills to the Cardinal offense.

Stanford had a team hitting percentage of .311 and BYU hit for .227. Nina Puikkonen and Mari Carpenter each had 12 kills, hitting for .172 and .375, respectively.

Caroline Bower had 10 digs, and Melissa Layton and Natalie Whitaker each had 10. The Cardinals out-blocked the Cougars 11-6. Michaelis is looking to improve the team's defense.

"We need to get better at defense, but we learned a lot," Michaelis said. "It's good to know we can compete with a team of that caliber. We need to get everybody working hard in practice."

Against Cal the Cougars were led by Caroline Bower, who had 15 digs and 12 kills with a hitting percentage of .600.

Other strong performances included Puikkonen who had 12 kills and five blocks, setter Anna-Lena Smith with five kills and 41 assists, and Layton, who had seven kills and nine digs.

The Cougars hit for .333 while California hit for .083.

Michaelis said serving was key in the match against Cal.

"It was a server seed match, because they were shorter they tried to serve really tough," she said.

BYU's next match will be Oct. 1 at Air Force.

Lack of sleep affects body much like booze

Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS — Too little sleep can slow you down as much as too many drinks.

That's the conclusion of a Stanford University study of people with mild to moderate sleep apnea: people whose breathing stops several or even dozens of times an hour, interrupting their sleep without their knowledge.

About 12 million Americans have the problem but fewer than 2 million of them have been diagnosed, according to the American Sleep Apnea Association's Web site. The undiagnosed figure may be as high as 25 million, according to Stanford's Sleep Disorders Clinic and Research Center.

People known to have apnea did as poorly on a test of reaction time as people who were too drunk to drive a bus or truck in California, said Dr. Nelson B. Powell of the Stanford center.

On three of seven measurements, they did worse than people too drunk to drive at all in California and other states where the legal test is a blood alcohol content of .08 percent.

Powell said he wanted to underscore the dangers of driving while sleepy, whether or not it's because of apnea.

"How many times have you or anybody you've known been nodding off at the wheel," he said. "I'd bet every driver, at one time or another has driven too tired. We know it's wrong but we still do it."

Powell presented his study Sunday at the annual convention American Academy of Otolaryngology-Head and Neck Surgery Foundation, Inc.

The study looked at 80 volunteers and 113 people with apnea. The volunteers' average age was 29; 56 percent were women. In contrast, 81 percent of the apnea patients were men, and their average age was 47.

However, statistical analysis ruled out age and gender as reasons for the difference, Powell said.

The apnea patients, whose breath stopped about 29 times an hour while they were asleep, did worse on all seven measurements than the drinkers did on their first re-test, and worse on three of them than those who were legally drunk.

Private schools chosen more, study says

By SHERALYN BOYLE

More Utah parents are choosing private schools or home study over public schools, according to a study released this week by the Sutherland Institute, a public-policy research organization in Salt Lake City.

The study, based on information from the Utah State Office of Education, shows that the percentage of school-age children enrolled in public schools has declined over the past two decades.

Utah's population has grown about 1.36 percent per year since 1990, while public school enrollment has been growing about 0.35 percent per year.

"Private school enrollment is increasing at about 3 percent a year, slightly faster than the population," said Dr. David Salisbury, director of the study.

"Home schooling in Utah appears to be growing about 2.5 percent per year, which is reflective of a national trend," he said.

Mossi White, president of the Provo City School Board, said students can get a solid education in Utah's public schools.

"Public education is what has made this country great," White said. "It is a system that offers students access to an excellent education," she said.

White added that Utah schools are the least funded in the nation, yet the students continue to score very high on achievement tests. Also Utah is the leading state for students passing advanced placement classes.

Joanna Rothe, a secretary at American Heritage, a private school in Pleasant Grove, said private schools have many advantages.

"We have uniforms, smaller classes, and we can teach religion," Rothe said.

Rothe said each class at American Heritage school has less than 20 students, which provides a beneficial student-teacher ratio.

Rothe's first-grade son attends American Heritage. Rothe said he is progressing quickly and seems to be further ahead in school than neighbor children.

American Heritage was established 30 years ago by The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

The tuition ranges from $186 per month to $255 per month per student, depending on the grade.

The Sutherland Institute's study of enrollment trends is part of a comprehensive research project called "Utah Schools: An In-depth Look."

Copies of the complete study are available on the Sutherland Institute's web site at www.sutherlandinstitute.org.

Utah Schools: An In-Depth Look

1980

-Utah population growth = 1.61 %
-public school enrollment growth = 2.43 %

1990

-Utah population growth = 2.36 %
-public school enrollment growth = .035 %

Public School Enrollment = up 3 % per year
Home Study = up 2.5 % per year

Inventor determined to build blimp

By NELDA MASCHMEYER
nelda@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

Even though many lives could be saved, many at BYU are not interested in a flying hospital shaped like a blimp, said Darrell Campbell, 48, the inventor and developer of Turtleships International.

Campbell said he has wanted to build the blimp he calls Turtleship for 20 years but has not had success, especially at BYU, because people are not as receptive as he imagined.

"I have had a lot of ridicule because people are not willing to listen. It is not until they start talking to me that they realize how great this project sounds," Campbell said.

He said it would help people especially in third world countries where there are no runways. The blimp could easily land in the rainforest without having to cut up a lot of trees to create a runway.

Campbell recently moved from Washington to Provo. He said he thought if he got enough members of the LDS Church interested in the blimp project it would also serve as a good cause for spreading the gospel.

Campbell said now he is unsure if moving was the right idea. But he said he will build the blimp regardless of what people say.

Steve Turley, associate professor of Physics and Astronomy said a blimp is more fuel efficient, but it is hard to get the blimp to land and ascend again without some kind of tether.

"I think blimps of this sort are good for stadiums where Goodyear and FUJI advertise. All in all, they fly well, are slower and I would mostly worry about storms and such occurring," Turley said. But some people at BYU say Campbell is on the right track.

Kenneth Chase, professor of Mechanical Engineering said this is a wonderful idea. He said blimps were formerly used more than airplanes during World War II and they are still a viable option. He said most people don't know Red Cross hospital blimpships exist.

Chase said he knows blimps are used in the logging industry to move the logs to different parts of the country.

He said it is great because it protected the environment.
